

Method for Triggering Flow Control Packets

Abstract

5 A method triggers the transmission of a flow control packet between a receiving device and a sending device on the basis of space available to receive data in a buffer associated with the receiving device. The method increases throughput in a system that requires a flow control packet every predetermined number of clock cycles.